Be somebody's first boss.
 Hire a high school intern.
 Your first boss is your most important boss.
 That's the one who showed you the ropes, gave you your first pay stub, taught you what it means to do a good day's work.
 New York City's Work-based Learning Resource Center at the Department of Education places skilled and eager New York students into internships – part-time, full-time or over the summer. We have hundreds of certified programs in diverse fields like: health care, computer repair, building trades, web site design, cosmetology, aviation technology, marine studies, digital photography, electrical installation, culinary arts, hospitality, automotive technologies, business and finance, and more.

BREAKING NEWS MARCH 11

A new "Certificate of Career Development and Occupational Studies" endorsed by the New York State Board of Regents as a certificate of readiness for entry-level employment.

Schools must have evidence that the student demonstrated knowledge and skills related to the CDOS learning standards in the areas of career development – or one of the four national work readiness credentials
